

Kara Buller
Fallon Packet
karabuller@gmail.com

August 26, 2011

Italian Parliament has passed a law that will ban women from wearing clothing that covers their faces. The Italian government said that Muslim women still have plenty of other traditional options for obscuring their faces—such as burying their heads in shame.

The presidential bus is rumored to be built not in America but in Canada. They could tell because when you left a door open instead of saying “your door is ajar” the bus said “Soory but you wanna close that door, eh?”

Apple has unveiled their plans for a new ring-shaped headquarters. It’s just like their website’s complaint section: there’s no end to it.

The White House says Obama’s new 1.1 million dollar bus allows him to visit real people in real places. Yeah, well so does the B15 through Bed-Sty.

The government is requiring some horrifying new graphics to appear on cigarettes. Some of the ads are so graphic they even depict what happens to your soul while selling cigarettes.

The Pentagon reported today that the body armor used by the army in Iraq was insufficiently tested. Makes sense: so was the evidence used to enter the war.

It was announced today that Google purchased Motorola Mobility, mostly to obtain Motorola’s 6,000 patents. Rupert Murdoch got a little excited when he heard about it. He said, “6,000 patents! Now you have to have some good phone hacking apps in there!”

A gay anchorman accused Marcus Bachman of elbowing him into a cart while at the Iowa State Fair. But Mr. Bachman clarified the situation and said he was just trying to help him on his way to his clinic for gay-washing.

In an interview with Fox, Michelle Bachman mentioned she had a titanium spine. John McCain then leaned over and asked, “Does yours act up in the humidity too? I hate that!”

Mitt Romney told a group of hecklers that “Corporations are people, my friend.”
Or as everybody else took it: “My friends are Corporations, my people.”

Employers added roughly 117,000 jobs to the US economy in the last month. However, this was offset by the fact that in the last month, Latin America added over 117,000 employees to the US economy.

Roughly 117,000 jobs were added to the US economy in the last month. However, experts expect that to taper off--as 50% of that is wedding planners and Cher impersonators for New York's gay marriages.

A partial agency shutdown has left 4,000 FAA agents out of work. The head of the aviation agency announced "flying is safe. No one needs to worry about safety," and then asked his aide to hand him the Amtrak schedule.

A designer has launched a project to help counteract this fast-paced world--they will turn your emails into snail mails. They will also take your healthy body and turn it into a polio-stricken, infection-prone mess.

A Conservative Christian Texas Governor with controversial ties to big business and a dreadful academic record is gearing up to run for President. Or as liberals called it: apply for your Canadian passport now.

The UK Prime Minister had to cut short his vacation in Tuscany due to the unrest, instantly winning the sympathy of the rioters.

The News of the World reportedly had a cash window for reporters to get large sums of bribe money. Then they had a window out which they threw all their journalistic integrity.

Italian leader Berlusconi is under attack after saying "it's better to like beautiful girls than to be gay." His advisors are saying "it's BETTER TO NOT SAY THINGS LIKE THAT."

Sony announced that it will be releasing its final batch of the once-popular Walkman cassette players. Makes sense as America has released its final batch of eccentric old men who hang out in libraries and use cassette players.

In his video for the "It Gets Better" anti-bullying campaign, Obama said that bullying is not a normal rite of passage. However, the video was accidentally spliced with images of Obama dumping a bag of flour on the new White House Chief of Staff.

Michael Jackson has topped the list of the richest dead. This comes as no surprise: before his death in 2009, he frequently topped the list of the richest undead.

A man put to death for multiple murders in Arizona had the last words, "Boomer Sooner," a cheer often used by University of Oklahoma fans. University of Oklahoma then announced its contest for a new cheer.

A giant 65-foot deep sinkhole opened up in Germany. Rumor is Charlie Sheen wants to jump inside it so he can fully bottom out.

Seven former US Air Force officers gave testimony saying they witnessed UFOs capable of disabling nuclear weapons. Another officer gave testimony that those USAF guys had the most amazing shrooms.

It was the first day back at school for a Georgia school system that had endured rampant cheating. The Clintons and the Weiners wished the school luck, having also survived rampant cheating.

Two Republicans lost their jobs in the Wisconsin recall. Well, that makes two Republicans who really care about job loss.

Border officials are now scrutinizing the immigrants going out of this country, forcing immigrants to stay in US and go deeper into hiding. So deep, one immigrant was found dressing up as Casey Anthony.

The Pentagon reported today that the army improperly tested the body armor used in Iraq. All they did was throw rocks at the plates while doing a stereotypical impression of Muslim boys.

Tim Pawlenty is out of the race—he's the guy who used phrases like "deep doo-doo" and "manure spreader in a windstorm." He says he goes home but we'll be seeing him again—he's the kind of candidate who's at least a two-flusher.

Tim Pawlenty has dropped out of the race. So we can all get back to not knowing who he is.

Obama is on a bus tour in the Midwest where he plans to engage "real folks in real places." Apparently, he's tired of dealing with the folks from Middle-Earth, the Galactic Empire and the Kingdom of Far, Far Away.

Polls are showing that Americans have a bleak outlook on jobs. They say that jobs often suck.

The UK Prime Minister had to cut short his vacation in Tuscany due to the unrest. To which the rioters said "dude that sucks!"

Dominoes Pizza is running a contest in Japan to celebrate the company's 25 years in the country. They will pay one lucky winner $31,000 to do one hour's worth of work. Hey, that's kinda what happened with my stoner friend John in high school. He worked for them for two years, got $31,000, did about an hours worth of work.

Benigno Aquino III, the new President of the Phillipines, has promised, in his efforts to signal change and honest leadership, that his cavalcade will stop at red lights and not use sirens. Also, he will yield to pedestrians, tip homeless window-washers and stop picking his nose while he waits at the light.

The economy is so weak consumers are cancelling their cable television. Really making some deep cuts there America. It's really a heart-break when you have to cut off your supply of Tatum O'Neal documentaries and the latest episodes of Pawn Stars.

Obama is on an "economic bus tour" that he says is not part of his re-election campaign. He also handed out buttons, kissed babies and gave stump speeches as not part of his campaign.

The second man to walk on the moon has a history of battling demons and a branding company. When did Buzz Aldrin turn into Lindsey Lohan?

Desk Bits

1. New World Heritage Sites

Many of the UNESCO world heritage sites are getting destroyed by erosion and other natural disasters. But there are many culturally significant sites that don't have official designation and they need protecting as well. Here are some historic sites that are threatened on a daily basis:

(For each a clumsy graphic depicting each is shown)

- Make-out Point. Make-out point has been threatened for years by suburban land development and weird sex-friendly parents who just hand their kids condoms.
- The Little Black Spot on the Sun Today. The little black spot on the Sun Today, same old spot as yesterday, but maybe not forever. As Sting enters his 60s and his fans face a similar fate, the chances of the enjoyment of this upbeat chart-topper King of Pain diminish. Keep King of Pain preserved by selecting it as your next karaoke song.
- Your Safe Place - Your Safe Place is facing daily threats from co-workers, visiting parents and the opposite sex. Go to your safe place now.
- myspace.com . Myspace has all but totally succumbed to porn star looking women who want to be your friend.

2. Where are They Now? Your Favorite Sitcom Characters

Takes favorite sitcom characters and gives them real life situations twenty years later

The Connors – Dan and Roseanne Connor ended up moving to Florida, then Roseanne went through this weird phase of making miniatures and she got pretty involved in that world and then Dan lost his job and started working at this Indian-American run motel. Weird.

Rugrats – Tommy Pickles, the little baby—you remember him with the screwdriver in his diaper so he could get out of his playpen—he went on to serve in Afghanistan but got really messed up in the head but now he's on some good anti-depressants so he's doing okay.

Friends – They all moved upstate. The whole cast.

3. Ways to Save on Back to School Supplies

“Since back to school is right around the corner, we thought we'd highlight some creative ways to save on school supplies.”

Don't have your husband go shopping for supplies. Send the man you're having an affair with. He cares less about your kids and will spend less money.

Take a walk around your house and see what supplies you already have. Then take a walk around your neighbor's house and see what they have.

Your child's taste may change over the years. They may be a fan of Sponge Bob Squarepants now, but in 3 years will they outgrow that? A discounted Lehman Brothers tote bag from Ebay is timeless.

College version:

Since college textbooks are so expensive, skip college.

Tuition is often the priciest part of college. But not if your father is the vice-Chancellor. Engage in high-jinks that land you in the dean's office. Arrange for your hot mom to fly in and woo the dean. (This tip is sort of elaborate.)

Like a cartoon character or an iconic gay designer, wear the same outfit all the time.

Instead of joining a fraternity or sorority, sign up for AAA. They provide roadside assistance and a wide array of member discounts.

4. Venn Diagrams

Explore two disparate topics and see what happens when they meet.

Diagram: Scary/sweet=scary and sweet. Show picture of Ashley Olson with tattoos all over here face.

Fast and stalled. How can something be fast and stalled at the same time? Show a picture of some famous but injured sports star.

